AutoExtra.com[®] Selects AutoCheck[®] as Exclusive Source of Vehicle History Reports

New partnership boosts online resources for dealers and consumers buying and selling used vehicles with leading vehicle history information

Schaumburg, Ill., June 11, 2007 – Experian Automotive, a division of global information solutions company Experian[®] Inc., today announced that AutoExtra.com has selected its AutoCheck solution as the exclusive source of vehicle history reports for consumers and dealers buying and selling vehicles online.

AutoExtra.com, a leading online source for buying, selling and researching used vehicles, has now integrated AutoCheck vehicle history reports into its offerings. AutoExtra.com visitors can now easily access the history of any used vehicle to reveal possible undisclosed or unknown problems that can affect its safety and resale value.

“Contextual details are always important in the decision making process, especially when purchasing something as important as a car. We’re excited about this new partnership because AutoCheck provides vital background information and empowers our customers to make informed decisions with confidence,” said Joe George, vice president of AutoExtra.com.

Consumers visiting AutoExtra.com can access AutoCheck’s full vehicle history reports which leverage Experian’s National Vehicle Database of more than half a billion vehicles to disclose important events in a vehicle’s history such as major flood damage, frame damage, or odometer rollback issues, along with other key information. Having access to this information helps AutoExtra.com dealers bring added value and peace of mind to potential customers while giving consumers the means to make the most educated vehicle purchasing decision possible.

“The online marketplace for used vehicles continues to grow rapidly, and as it does, so does the need to have the best information to help in choosing which vehicle is right for you,” said Scott Waldron, president of Experian Automotive. “Combining AutoExtra’s research tools, safety information and vehicle reviews with AutoCheck vehicle history reports provides consumers and dealers with the best resources possible to help them buy or sell a used vehicle.”
